Ex-Tories challenge for seats

▶ Wildrose Alliance has nominated a former PC party worker and supporter of Premier Ed Stelmach to run against the premier in his own riding in 2012

When Shannon Stubbs saw the empty chair, she decided she had to take the seat.

Stubbs, who had supported the governing Tories since her teens, was sitting in the Vegreville Social Centre in late August with 500 or so others in Premier Ed Stelmach's home riding.

They wanted answers and wanted to voice their anger over a proposed monster power line that could cut through their prime farmland.

All the opposition party leaders were there — David Swann of the Liberals, Brian Mason of the NDP and Danielle Smith of the Wildrose Alliance.

There was one empty chair, left for Stelmach, who was actually down the road holding a news conference saying he couldn't attend because there was a potential conflict of interest — he owns land that may have a line run through it.

"I just couldn't believe he wouldn't show up to be accountable," said Stubbs, who has now been nominated as the Wildrose candidate to take him on in the next election, slated for the spring of 2012.

Path of disillusionment

Shannon Stubbs, 30, grew up in the Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville riding east of Edmonton.

- ➤ The Stelmachs were family friends, coming over for dinner. She voted for him, worked for his Progressive Conservatives and staunchly supported his fiscal hawkishness.
- Stubbs said she was appalled by Stelmach and cabinet giving themselves a pay raise of 30 per cent.

The 2012 contest is now shaping up as something of an uncivil civil war — conservatives once comrades in arms now taking up election signs against one another.

Three of the Alliance's four legislature members — Rob Anderson, Heather Forsyth, and Guy Boutilier — all crossed the floor to join Paul Hinman, who rocked the Tory boat a year ago when he won the Alliance's first seat in the PC stronghold of Calgary-Glenmore. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Southeast LRT plan faces rough ride

 City proposing 50 new LRT cars
 Douglasdale Express bus route to downtown takes about one hour

Travel relief many southeast commuters were looking for may not be coming anytime soon, says one city alderman.

According to Ward 12 Ald. Shane Keating, city council could be recommending the delay in the southeast LRT expansion when it is brought to council today.

"It seems like whenever we get enough money, it gets sidetracked," said Keating.

Keating said council is set to recommend the enhancement of the existing transit system by adding more LRT cars and more than $15 million on a comprehensive BRT system and cater to commuters outside the city limits.

U of C students launch unique Haiti fundraiser

Students hope to help fund clinic that will serve over 13,000 people within two-hour walking distance

Some Calgarians will be shelling out good money tomorrow to get a small glimpse into the life of a poor man.

Faculty of medicine students at the U of C are hosting the Rich Man Poor Man dinner to raise money to help with the startup costs of a medical clinic in Bouly, Haiti.

"It is a very unique concept that simulates global poverty," said Giselle De-Vetten, organizer and member of the Global and Public Health Interest Group.

One person at the table of eight will be served the rich-man meal, consisting of steak and several side dishes, while the others will be served the poorman meal, which is made up of rice, beans and vegetables.

Rolling, walking and running on the river

The first phase of Calgary's Riverwalk Project was unveiled on Nov. 6, giving Calgarians a new place to stroll, bike and enjoy the river.

Running alongside the Bow and across the river from Memorial Drive, this new urban path restores the riverbank and links to the east village to the core

"We wanted to re-engage Calgarians with the Bow area," said Chris Ollenberger of Calgary Municipal Land Corporation.

"This new system of pathways will give the riverbank a new look, and it will be a nice addition to the area."

According to Ollenberg-er, this is the first of six phases. When all six phases are finished, the pathway system will stretch from Chinatown to Stampede Park.

Ald. Druh Farrell said this project will improve the interface for people living in the area.

"We wanted to give the people living there a chance to see and touch the river," said Farrell.

"We recognize the wonderful amenity that the river is in this city, and the development of these paths sets a tone for future projects."

The second phase of this project will open in late spring of next year.

WWI veterans, memories honoured at Vimy memorial

◆ Young Canadians make pilgrimage to France ◆ Students serve as guides at Vimy, Beaumont-Hamel

Three Montreal buddies, who had promised themselves for years they would make the pilgrimage, carried bouquets and fought back tears as they joined 800 other people yesterday at Remembrance Week ceremonies at the Canadian National Vimy Memorial.

It was an eclectic group who huddled in the raw cold: serving Canadian soldiers stationed in Europe, local French dignitaries, veterans and their families, and a class of 10-year-old French schoolchildren from nearby Douai who had spent weeks learning to sing O Canada.

Bloc Quebecois Leader Gilles Duceppe, on a 10-day working tour of Europe, joined the procession of officials laying wreathes at the site of the 1917 Battle of Vimy Ridge.

But the most striking note was the presence of dozens of younger Canadians, some who had travelled great distances to be at the memorial.

They came despite the passage of time that's eroding memories. A poll from The Historica-Dominion Institute suggests Canadians know the most about the current war in Afghanistan than earlier conflicts.

Montrealers Robert Stinziani, James Gallagher and Anthony Ferro, all 35 and friends since childhood, brought flowers to lay at the soaring white granite monument at the Vimy memorial, the final stop in a tour of Canadian war sites in France.

Battle of Somme

On Saturday, 200 people gathered for services at Beaumont-Hamel, near Vimy Ridge, considered hallowed ground to Newfoundlanders.

On July 1, 1916, the first day of the Battle of the Somme, of 801 Newfoundlanders who went into battle, only 68 were able to answer the roll call the next day.

"We were raised by people who fought in the war," Gallagher said. "It is up to us now to educate the next generation. We feel very strongly about that."

Miner finishes race

A Chilean miner ran, walked and hobbled his way to the finish line of the New York City Marathon, showing the determination that helped him survive more than two months trapped underground.

Edison Pena needed bags of ice for his knees as he made his way over the 42-kilometre course yesterday.

He crossed the finish line in Central Park around 3:30 p.m. after starting in Staten Island at 9:40 a.m.

The 34-year-old was among the 33 miners rescued last month after spending 69 days entombed 700 metres underground by a cave-in.

An avid runner, he jogged several kilometres every day through tunnels. He had cut his steel-tipped electrician's boots down to ankle height so he could train each morning and afternoon along the rocky, 1,000-metre corridor where the men were trapped.

NYC Marathon officials heard about Pena's subterranean training and planned to invite him as an honoured guest. But he wanted to actually run the race.

World-record holder Haile Gebrselassie announced his retirement after dropping out of the race on a day that signalled the rise of a new Ethiopian star: Gebre Gebremariam won the men's title in his debut.

Mrs. Obama charms Mumbai

President Barack Obama tried to avoid it, but he couldn't escape being pulled into a dance by schoolchildren celebrating the Indian holiday of Diwali, or the festival of lights, yesterday.

Obama watched admiringly as his wife, Michelle, joined girls dressed in colourful hues of blues, greens, pinks and orange in a swaying dance with graceful hand gestures.

He appeared to resist when students from Holy Name High School in Mumbai approached. Eventually, Obama gave in, got up and strutted his stuff, too. He jumped around a little and made awkward sawing movements with his arms.

The performance was reminiscent of George W. Bush playing drums during a trip to Africa.

Mrs. Obama joined the children far more enthusiastically than her husband.

Perhaps it was because she'd already won over the Indian media by kicking off her flats a day earlier and dancing with underprivileged children elsewhere in Mumbai.

On the second of the three days he is spending in India, Obama arrived in New Delhi yesterday afternoon in the company of his wife, Michelle.

Among his airport greeters were Prime Minister Manmohan Singh, who apparently broke the normally rigid rules of protocol by making the trip to personally welcome Obama to the Indian capital.

Singh had given a similar honour to Bush when he visited India in 2006.

While there's probably an argument for the holiday becoming too commercial. let's be honest, if Christmas was only contained to our four vacation days in December, when which essentially allows you to kiss a complete stranger without having to buy them dinner or mini-doughnuts. Why this plant's magical powers are not celebrated year-round is one of life's biggest mysteries.

While this city has a great reputation of being nice to everyone year-round, we really show our true colours during the holidays. For the next two months, as we twist and weave through the +15, it's impossible not to hear everyone wishing each other "Happy Holidays" or old friends catching up. So why not enjoy it? Because in January, when you are sitting in traffic for two hours due to a snowfall warning or trying to navigate our snowy sidewalks, you're going to yearn for the days when people smiled and said Merry Christmas to complete strangers.

Now seriously, where is our Santa Claus parade?

Can Conan O'Brien conquer TV, again?

• After his Tonight show departure, O'Brien went viral. Now, he returns to late night.

Timing is key in comedy, especially for one formerly unemployed talk-show host. While Conan O'Brien's departure from Tonight was a sorry mess. it was in sync with the growing influence of social media.

His extensive use of Twitter and Facebook gave O'Brien a direct pipeline to fans, keeping him in a computer-generated spotlight.

With tonight's debut of his TBS show, Conan, O'Brien will learn if being an online sensation can help to foster ratings success in cable TV.

There's no question the online universe drastically affected O'Brien's post-Tonight life. With an NBC settlement agreement that included an extended ban on TV appearances, O'Brien found he could keep followers intrigued with messages on Twitter and Facebook. Then there's the Team Coco website, giving the public show details that include the guest list.

"I was supposed to be in the wilderness, but I carried on this relationship that in some ways seemed more meaningful than any relationship I've had in television." he said

The question now is will online fans tune in for Conan or wait to see it online? TBS is making it easy, announcing the show will be posted online the morning after it airs.

But that means ratings take a hit. O'Brien averaged 2.5-million viewers during his Tonight tenure, a number that would be welcomed by TBS. The bar for success isn't overwhelmingly high, said analyst Steve Sternberg. If O'Brien can increase the under one-million nightly viewers George Lopez was getting for TBS at 11 p.m., then Conan will "probably be considered successful," Sternberg said.

What about the possibility of booking wars?

"I've made a lot of friends over the years. I've always been pretty much able to have most of the people I wanted on the show ... I don't think that's going to change," O'Brien said. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Creator of $#*! My Dad tells critics to tweet off

Canadian comic Will Sasso is shrugging off critics of his Twitter-inspired hit sitcom, $#*! My Dad Says, saying the show's consistent ratings triumphs are speaking louder than any had review

The series has generated some of the most terrible TV reviews of the new season, but Sasso says he'd much rather take cues from the audience that is making the series a modest hit on CTV and CBS.

"Comedy is subjective. There's a lot of people watching the show and it's won its time slot every week that it's been on, so that's a review in my mind," says Sasso, who portrays the son of a crusty war veteran, played by William Shatner.

$#*! My Dad Says helped push CBS to the number one spot in prime-time, and earned a full-season pickup from the U.S. network after just one month on air. And it did so even though none of the 26 critics listed on metacritic offered a positive notice.

TV expert Marc Berman says the average viewer just wants to be entertained by a conventional premise: A son moves in with his cantankerous father, a second son visits often with a wacky wife.

"It's not brain surgery. There's nothing wrong with that," says Berman, a Mediaweek columnist.

Sasso says his new show is unique in that it's inspired by real people, whose lives have already well-documented been through show creator

Still, Berman credits
much of the success of $#*! My Dad Says to the juggernaut crowd-pleaser The Big Bang Theory, which immediately precedes the show on Thursday nights.

Tough lucha love

▶ Family night at the wrestling ring ▶ For some bonding, nothing beats the cursing of lucha libre ▶ Americans in the Southwest embracing lucha libre as one of their cultural tradition

Adorable Yuki, a hefty figure in pink and black spandex, soaks in the cheers and ear-splitting screams from the crowd. Tonight, the wrestler has a trick — or rather a treat — up his sleeve.

To celebrate the Mexican holiday, El Dia del Nino (Kids' Day), Yuki hurls handfuls of candy into the audience. Kids make a dive for it, then are back in their seats — joining their parents in booing and yelling at the referee to shut up.

Bodies, not candy, are

Bodies, not candy, are what tend to go flying at a lucha libre wrestling match. But in heavily Hispanic cities such as Phoenix, some parents are choosing the decades-old Mexican form of free fighting as a way to gain some quality time.

Little kids can swear and flash the middle finger during what are sometimes violent matches. Mothers typically have one eye on a fight and the other on a stroller.

eye on a light and the oner on a stroller.

"When you're at a movie, it's quiet and relaxed. Here you can yell, scream and get all the anger out of you. You can have fun and all that," said Ernesto del Real, who has taken his wife and three of his children, ages five to 11, to body-slamming bouts on Friday nights.

The profanity and pummelling might appal non-Hispanic families. But anyone familiar with lucha libre would know it's part of the spectacle.

"When you're at lucha libre, you shout obscenities, insult people, act in ways that wouldn't necessarily be acceptable elsewhere," said Heather Levi, an assistant professor in anthropology at Temple University. "I remember the time I was sitting in front of woman who was teaching a three-year-old to do it. It was like, 'OK, now you say..."

Lucha libre has been rooted in Mexican popular culture since the 1930s. Wrestlers wear colourful masks and personas.

The genre gained more notice when it was showcased on TV and in B novies.

"Children were not allowed into arenas (in Mexico City) until the mid-1980s," said Levi, author of The World of Lucha Libre: Secrets, Revelations, and Mexican National Identity.

Now, she said, "In Mexico, people bring their children, their grandparents."
In the Southwest, it

In the Southwest, it seems that people are seeing lucha libra as a cultural thing, "really embracing it as something Mexican they take their kids to," said Levi.

For some kids who have grown up in the U.S., watching Jack Black in Nacho Libre, has been the extent of their lucha libre exposure.

Seeing authentic luchadores go at it has been a bonding experience.

Peanuts eaten in pregnancy linked to allergy-prone kids

Peanut consumption while pregnant is associated with a higher likelihood that a woman's allergyprone baby will test positive for peanut allergy, a new study suggests.

The study examined babies with likely milk or egg allergies, or significant eczema, and their mothers' peanut-eating habits during pregnancy. The babies were selected based on characteristics that might indicate an increased risk of someday developing a peanut allergy.

"The more peanut they reported eating during pregnancy, the higher the risk of finding a positive or strongly positive test to peanut."

The findings were published Monday in the Journal of Allergy and Clinical Immunology.

The 503 babies at five U.S. sites were between three months and 15 months old when their mothers were questioned about their peanut consumption during pregnancy, and the babies were tested for the presence of antibodies in the blood that would suggest they're allergic to peanuts.

A warming recipe for chilly days

• Veal and white beans make this soup nutritious • Add a roll and some fruit for a whole meal

Leeks, leafy greens, tomatoes, white beans and ground veal pack a nutrient punch in this simple soup. Add a whole-grain roll and a piece of fruit for a quick, healthy, energy-sustaining meal.

Preparation:

- In a large saucepan, cook ground veal with salt and pepper over medium-high heat, breaking into small pieces, until no pink remains, about 10 minutes.
- Add leeks and cook until tender but not browned, about 5 minutes. Stir in rosemary and bay leaves.

- Pour in chicken broth and bring to a boil.
- Add in chard and reduce heat to maintain a simmer; cook for 10 minutes.
- 5 Stir in tomatoes and beans and heat through, about 5 minutes. Let sit for 10 minutes before serving.
- 6 Serve garnished with shaved Parmesan cheese and lemon zest.

Ingredients:

- 750 g (1 1/2 lb) ground
- 2 ml (1/2 tsp) each salt and pepper
- 500 ml (2 cups) chopped leeks (white and light green parts only)
- 15 ml (1 tbsp) chopped fresh rosemary
- 2 bay leaves
- 1.5 l (6 cups) chicken broth
- 1.5 l (6 cups) chopped Swiss chard, kale or spinach • 500 ml (2 cups) canned tomatoes
- 250 ml (1 cup) rinsed and drained canned white beans
- Shaved Parmesan cheese, for garnish
- Lemon zest, for garnish THE CANADIAN PRESS

Get creatively green by recycling your clothes

People have been recvcling clothing for as long we can remember. From hand-me-downs to taking up hemlines to sewing a button back on, the do-it-yourself fashion once reserved for small fixes is finding its way to stores, websites and cat-walks. And you can be a part of it simply by using what's already in your closet.

Whether you call it recycling, re-fashioning, repurposing, reclaiming or something else, it's an act of showing off your indi-viduality. It is also a good way to take a stand against consumer culture.

Tara White, founder and designer of Embody Clothing, which is sold across Toronto and Ottawa, says that she began making clothing because she didn't like the kinds of fashion sold in malls. "I found it really uninspired, and it seemed like everyone was wearing the same uniform," she says. "I liked the idea of when I'd make something, it would be one-of-a-kind. I started making clothes for myself, started making more and then was selling."

Tina Sparkles, a designer in Austin, Texas, re-cently released a book named Little Green Dresses, with 50 patterns for all different kinds of outfits.

"I feel really passionate about how our consumer culture is messing things up in the world and I think that gaining an awareness of that is important and I want to help spread that word," she

Sparkles feels that the idea of being eco-friendly can be too expensive and limiting, but people are still interested in being

If you don't want to use your own clothes, you can go to a thrift store, garage sale or even set up a clothes swap with your friends.

"It takes your own time and creativity," she says. "My inspiration comes from a lot of places. I love looking at vintage clothing and the old shapes and tiny details, trying to figure out a way to incorporate them into something new."

If you're interested, start off small. Find a cheap of clothing at Value Village that you have no qualms with ripping apart. You may get something out of it you'll love.

CANADIANS HAVE FLP AVOIDING

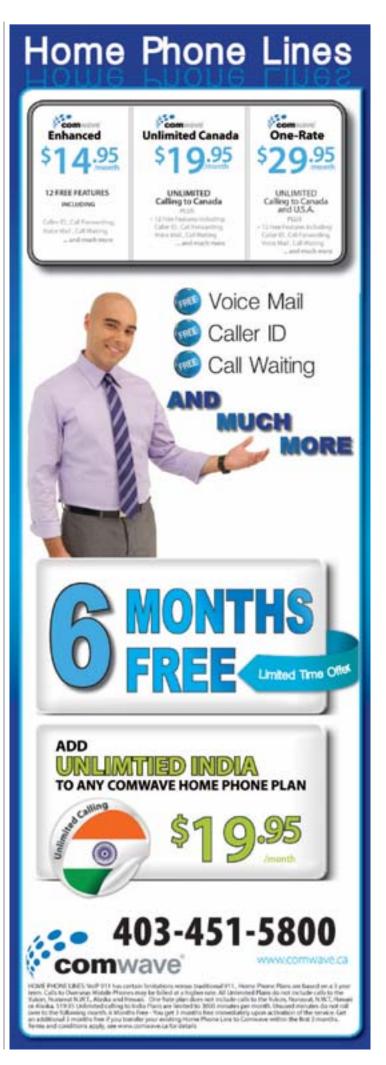

As a mother who cannot breast-feed. I'm wondering what are the effects of bisphenol-A (BPA) in canned baby formula? Heidi from Edmonton isphenol-A or BPA is a human health concern because of its ability to mimic estrogen. It's an industrial chemical used primarily in polycarbonate plastic. You might remember in 2008 when our federal government banned BPA from plastic baby bottles. But BPA is also in the epoxy resins lining our canned goods, and it becomes hazardous to our health because it refuses to stay put and migrates into food like baby formula. So, in addition to replacing your plastic baby bottles with BPA-free plastic or glass, choose powdered baby formula. Canadian tests show no BPA leaching into powdered formula, which is good news for moms. Or, look for liquid formula sold in glass or BPA-free plastic. There is good news for all Canadians when it comes to concerns about this hormone-disrupting chemical. This fall, Canada secured a world first a formal designation of BPA as "toxic." This means our government now has a stronger authority to ban BPA in consumer products. In the meantime, we should all buy fewer canned foods. According to Statistics Canada, more than 90 per cent of Canadians have detectable levels of BPA in their bodies. Choosing alternative packaging like glass jars or buying fresh, frozen or dried fruits and veggies will reduce your exposure. Dried beans, for example, have great flavour and texture, and you can control the salt and sugar content.

Networking is key to job hunt

• Reach out to your friends, family and colleagues to find hidden trove of unadvertised job openings

No job hunter should brave the wilderness all alone — that's what friends are for.

The vast online jungle of job boards can fool the unemployed into confusing job seeking for a soli-tary art, practiced in privacy, while the rest of society mingles over coffee. But if good job seekers know how to mass e-mail resumes from their bedroom window, then great job hunters know how to amplify their job search into a group effort - by roping cousins, coland utter strangers into their quest for that hidden trove of unadvertised openings.

"There's probably eight million jobs out there that nobody knows about," Careerealism.com founder "You don't want to be arrogant but you want to project confidence ... Don't unnecessarily put yourself down."

J.T. O'Donnell says.

"That's because businesses are saying 'I'm not going to publish the position, but, boy, if the right person crossed my desk, I would pull the trigger and invest."

Crossing that desk at the serendipitous instant requires more than chance — it takes a knack for hassling old pals for new job leads without them even realizing what's happening.

Start by easing in, Connecting With Success author Kathleen Barton recommends.

"Send them a personal message, 'How's your job going,' something to that effect," she suggests. "That gets the conversations started. Then you can share with them an update, that you're in a career transition and looking for something new."

"Don't directly ask somebody for a job," concurs Generation-Y careers blogger Lindsay Pollack. "You want to meet up with people for advice, you want to chat and discuss current events in your industry, but you do not want to show up, shove a resume in someone's face and say, 'I need a job."

Mostly, she says, because that smacks of desperation — and while you're looking for a job, becoming ever more penniless, frustrated, and despondent, businesses are looking for can-do spunk.

Another setback for Lumsden

◆ Stamps running back facing surgery on torn ACL after being hurt in Friday's win over Blue Bombers ◆ Canadian player has history of shoulder, knee and ankle injuries

While his Calgary Stampeders teammates are preparing for the CFL playoffs, Jesse Lumsden is getting ready for the operating room.

The Canadian running back will undergo surgery Nov. 15 to repair a torn anterior cruciate ligament in his left knee, the latest setback in his star-crossed football career.

Lumsden, 28, suffered the season-ending injury tackling Winnipeg's Brandon Stewart late in Friday's 35-32 win over the Blue Bombers.

Word of the injury's extent hit the West Division champion Stampeders hard yesterday.

"He was so excited about getting back on the field and he was doing a good job with his responsibilities, working hard and you could see the athlete that it is," said Stampeders coach and general manager John Hufnagel.

"You can't say much more at this time. You just hope for the very best, that he does have a good recovery, and gets back doing what he'd like to do."

The torn ACL is the latest injury to stall Lumsden, a former first-round draft pick of the Tiger-Cats who battled shoulder, knee and ankle injuries during his time playing for Hamilton.

"He'll be missed, but he's a hard worker. I'm sure he'll get back and he'll be ready to go next year."

LINEBACKER JUWAN SIMPSON

"It's a devastating loss," said defensive lineman De-Vone Claybrooks. "It's really tough and unfortunate, and he and his family are in my prayers. He's mentally strong and I know he'll persevere and he'll be back."

Lumsden injured his shoulder again in the first game of the 2009 season while with the Edmonton Eskimos, who cut him after the campaign.

He made his return to the CFL late this season with the Stamps, running for a 13-yard touchdown during a 55-24 win at home over the Ticats on Oct. 29.

Brett Favre's latest amazing fourth-quarter comeback may have not only saved the Minnesota Vikings' season, but coach Brad Childress's job as well.

Favre threw for a careerhigh 446 yards to rally the Vikings from 14 points down in the final four and half minutes and Ryan Longwell's 35-yard field goal in overtime lifted them to a 27-24 victory over the Arizona Cardinals yesterday.

Favre threw a 25-yard touchdown to Visanthe Shiancoe with 27 seconds to play in regulation, then hooked up with Bernard Berrian on a 22-yard pass in overtime to move the Vikings into position for an improbable victory.

Sweetie, I feel so blessed to have an angel like you in my life. You're truly something special. I love you sooo muchh & 1'm gonna cherish you always. Muah! LOVE, PIECES ;)

Babe, I hope your birthday is absolutely amazing and I can't wait for you to open my gift. You're amazing and deserve to have an incredible birthday. <3 RABBIT [betcha thought I'd forget;)]

SugarBear, I want the whole world to know I love you and cherish every moment we share together. You are my rock, my lover, my bestfriend and I look forward to sharing wonderful memories. LOVE YOUR SNOWANGEL xoxo

Today's horoscope

T Aries March 21-April 20 Put yourself in a loved one's hands and let them decide how you are going to spend the day. What you do is of less importance than the fact that you are doing it together.

Taurus April 21-May 21 With Venus, your ruler, moving back into the work and wellbeing sector of your chart today you'll have a lot on your mind. Don't burden yourself with more than you can carry.

II Gemini May 22-June 21 A loved one won't be quite so distant emotionally today, which is good news if there have been barriers between you in recent weeks. If they open up to you then you must open up to them as well.

Gancer June 22-July 22

What is right for you may not be right for someone else, and it is of the utmost importance that you remember that today. Make the effort to find out how and why people see things differently.

Ω Leo July 23-Aug.23 You have never been someone who is afraid to rock the boat a little. but now is not a good time to be confrontational, either in your personal affairs or at work.

← Libra Sept. 23-Oct. 23 There is something you left unfinished a short while ago. Give some thought as to what it might be, then make a serious effort to complete it. Everything else can wait.

M Scorpio oct. 24-Nov. 22 You seem to be of the opinion that you have failed in some way, that you have fallen short of the high standards you set yourself. Even if you have it's no big deal.

→ Sagittarius

Nov. 23-Dec. 21 Go out of your way to be friendly with people you work and socialize with. You don't have to do outrageous favours for them but you do have to recognize that they have dreams just like you.

り Capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 20

Employers and other authority figures will go out of their way to help you today, but a part of you doesn't quite believe they are being honest about their intentions

Aquarius Jan. 21-Feb. 18 Do what feels good to you and, if others don't like it, do it some more! You have never been afraid to take a few risks and today you will test the boundaries. As far as you're concerned there are no boundaries.

H Pisces Feb. 19-March 20 You may be tempted to bury your feelings where no one can find them. That would be a mistake. You can't keep your desires secret indefinitely. SALLY BROMPTON
